

Alun Michael for Police & Crime Commissioner

Making South Wales safer

In 3 years Alun Michael has built up an innovative team that is working to make South Wales the safest place in the UK.

Savage Conservative cuts have reduced the number of police officers in South Wales from 3,400 to 2,800 but Alun has worked with the Chief Constable to protect local policing and with councils and other agencies to cut crime and disorder. His initiatives to reduce violence against women and girls, cut offending in the 18-25 age group and to protect vulnerable people are all bearing fruit.

Alun's Police and Crime Plan 2016-2021 spells out how, if re-elected, he'll drive work forward to complete the job.
